ELN Parent Advocacy & Leadership Cohorts

The Opportunity

The Center for the Study of Social Policy (CSSP) is seeking parents, family members, and caregivers interested in building stronger childhood and family systems in their community to join an upcoming leadership development opportunity.

The ELN Parent Advocacy & Leadership Cohorts are designed to support parents in growing as community leaders and advocates through a six-month, virtual program. The virtual cohorts will bring together a dynamic group of parents interested in developing their leadership, community-building, and project planning skills.

Cohort participants will convene as a learning community to:

- build their advocacy and leadership skills
- explore community-building strategies
- develop (and get support to carry out) parent-led projects

The next cohort is set to launch in March 2025, and a Spanish-language cohort will follow in April 2025. If you are interested, please keep reading!

Who Can Participate

Participation in cohorts is open to parents and caregivers caring for young children (from the prenatal stage through age 8). We define parent and caregiver as: a caring adult entrusted with caregiving and raising of a child. Parents can have a variety of relational ties to a child, that includes biological and adoptive parents, extended family (for example, grandparents, aunts/uncles), legal guardians, chosen family, and other primary caregivers.

Each cohort participant must be engaged with a nonprofit organization or government agency working on early childhood issues in their community. This includes volunteer roles.

We strongly encourage parents and caregivers of all backgrounds to apply, especially LGBTQ+ individuals, people with disabilities, members of ethnic or religious minorities, fathers, young parents, and caregivers with different relational ties to the children under their care.

The Support

Participants will receive training and coaching from CSSP, as well as guest facilitators from other partner organizations in the Early Learning Nation Collective, to develop their skills to organize and convene parents at a community level, build their leadership capacity, and mobilize others to advocate for transformation of services, systems, and their communities. Each cohort will be fully virtual with monthly meetings and additional opportunities to connect as a group. This cohort will specifically support participants in developing and implementing a parent-led project to improve the experiences of families and young children in their community.

Each parent or caregiver will receive a $750 stipend after completing the 6-month cohort. Participants will have the opportunity to apply for parent-led project mini-grants of up to $2,500 per community to implement parent organizing and advocacy strategies in their own communities.
